

T.rex Discovery Centre

Eastend, SK

Dinosaurs at the dig site

The discovery of “Scotty”, one of the world’s finest and most complete T.rex specimens, cast an international spotlight on the discoveries taking place in the hills of southwestern Saskatchewan. Few locations in the world are as rich in Cretaceous and Tertiary finds.

The small town of Eastend accepted the challenge to develop a high quality visitor and research center that invites visitors to spend a few hours or days investigating dinosaurs. For those visitors who only have a few hours, AldrichPears created a variety of exhibit techniques that let visitors experience first hand the active research taking place at the center. For enthusiasts who have days, APA developed special programs that let them work alongside experts at the nearby dig sites.

APA worked closely with the fabricators to complete concept, schematic and detailed design for this design-build project.
